

Statistics for the SDGs - global indicators

Target 17.3 Mobilize additional financial resources for developing countries from multiple sources Definition The ratio of remittances (in US dollars) to GDP - expressed as a percentage. Unit Percent [%] Gross domestic product (GDP) illustrates the final result of the activity of all entities the national economy (resident producer units - domestic) in a given year. The exact definition and methodology for calculating GDP is contained in the regulation (EU) No 549/2013 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 21 May 2013 on the European system of national and regional accounts in the European Union (ESA 2010 GDP value can be calculated in three ways: • from the production side GDP is the sum of value added of all institutional sector or all sections of the Polish Classification of Activities (PKD) of domestic production entities plus taxes less subsidies on products, • from the distribution side GDP is calculated as the sum of domestic demand, i.e final consumption expenditure and gross capital formation as well as external balance of goods and services, • as the sum of uses in the total economy generation of income account (compensation of employees, taxes less subsidies on production and imports, gross operating surplus and mixed income of the total economy). Personal remittances comprise personal transfers and compensation of employees. Personal transfers thus includal current transfers between resident and non-resident individuals. Compensation of employees refers to the income of border, seasonal, and other short-term workers who are employed in an economy where they are not resident and of residents employed be non-resident entities. Data are the sum of two items defined in the sixth edition of the IMF's Balance of Payments Manual: personal transfers and compensation of employee. The methodology used is in line with the Sixth Edition of the IMF's Balance of Payments Manual: personal transfers and compensation of employee. The methodology used is in line with the Sixth Edition of the IMF'	Name of the indicator	17.3.2 Volume of remittances (in United States dollars) as a proportion of total GDP
Definition The ratio of remittances (in US dollars) to GDP - expressed as a percentage. Unit percent [%] Available dimensions Gross domestic product (GDP) illustrates the final result of the activity of all entities the national economy (resident producer units - domestic) in a given year. The exact definition and methodology for calculating GDP is contained in the regulation (EU) No 549/2013 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 21 May 2013 on the European system of national and regional accounts in the European Union (ESA 2010 GDP value can be calculated in three ways: • from the production side GDP is the sum of value added of all institutional sector or all sections of the Polish Classification of Activities (PKD) of domestic production entities plus taxes less subsidies on products, • from the distribution side GDP is calculated as the sum of domestic demand, i.e final consumption expenditure and gross capital formation as well as external balance of goods and services, • as the sum of uses in the total economy generation of income account (compensation of employees, taxes less subsidies on production and imports, gross operating surplus and mixed income of the total economy). Personal remittances comprise personal transfers and compensation of employees. Personal transfers to consist of all current transfers in cash or in kind made or received be resident households. Personal transfers thus inclused in current transfers to a service of employees. Personal transfers to the income of border, esasonal, and other short-term workers who are employed in an economy where they are not resident and of residents employed in non-resident entities. Data are the sum of two items defined in the sixth edition of the IMF's Balance of Payments Manual: personal transfers and compensation of employe. The methodology used is in line with the Sixth Edition of the IMF's Balance of Payment and International Investment Position Manual (BPM6).	Sustainable Development Goal	Goal 17. Partnerships for the goals
total Gross domestic product (GDP) illustrates the final result of the activity of all entities the national economy (resident producer units - domestic) in a given year. The exact definition and methodology for calculating GDP is contained in the regulation (EU) No 549/2013 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 21 May 2013 on the European system of national and regional accounts in the European Union (ESA 2010) GDP value can be calculated in three ways: • from the production side GDP is the sum of value added of all institutional sector or all sections of the Polish Classification of Activities (PKD) of domestic production entities plus taxes less subsidies on products, from the distribution side GDP is calculated as the sum of domestic demand, i.e. final consumption expenditure and gross capital formation as well as external balance of goods and services, • as the sum of uses in the total economy generation of income account (compensation of employees, taxes less subsidies on production and imports, gross operating surplus and mixed income of the total economy). Personal remittances comprise personal transfers and compensation of employees. Personal transfers between resident and non-resident individuals. Compensation of employees refers to the income of border, seasonal, and other short-term workers who are employed in an economy where they are not resident and of residents employed be non-resident entities. Data are the sum of two items defined in the sixth edition of the IMF's Balance of Payments Manual: personal transfers and compensation of employees the methodology used is in line with the Sixth Edition of the IMF's Balance of Payments Manual: personal transfers and compensation of employee and International Investment Position Manual (BPM6). Data source National Bank of Poland Annual data; since 2010	Target	· ·
Gross domestic product (GDP) illustrates the final result of the activity of all entities the national economy (resident producer units - domestic) in a given year. The exact definition and methodology for calculating GDP is contained in the regulation (EU) No 549/2013 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 21 May 2013 on the European system of national and regional accounts in the European Union (ESA 2010) GDP value can be calculated in three ways: • from the production side GDP is the sum of value added of all institutional sector or all sections of the Polish Classification of Activities (PKD) of domestic production entities plus taxes less subsidies on products, • from the distribution side GDP is calculated as the sum of domestic demand, i.e final consumption expenditure and gross capital formation as well as external balance of goods and services, • as the sum of uses in the total economy generation of income account (compensation of employees, taxes less subsidies on production and imports, gross operating surplus and mixed income of the total economy). Personal remittances comprise personal transfers and compensation of employees. Personal transfers consist of all current transfers and compensation of employees resident households. Personal transfers thus inclual current transfers between resident and non-resident individuals. Compensation of employees refers to the income of border, seasonal, and other short-term workers who are employed in an economy where they are not resident and of residents employed be non-resident entities. Data are the sum of two items defined in the sixth edition of the IMF's Balance of Payments Manual: personal transfers and compensation of employee The methodology used is in line with the Sixth Edition of the IMF's Balance of Paymen and International Investment Position Manual (BPM6). Data source National Bank of Poland Annual data; since 2010	Definition	The ratio of remittances (in US dollars) to GDP - expressed as a percentage.
Gross domestic product (GDP) illustrates the final result of the activity of all entities the national economy (resident producer units - domestic) in a given year. The exact definition and methodology for calculating GDP is contained in the regulation (EU) No 549/2013 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 21 May 2013 on the European system of national and regional accounts in the European Union (ESA 2010) GDP value can be calculated in three ways: • from the production side GDP is the sum of value added of all institutional sector all sections of the Polish Classification of Activities (PKD) of domestic production entities plus taxes less subsidies on products, • from the distribution side GDP is calculated as the sum of domestic demand, i.e final consumption expenditure and gross capital formation as well as external balance of goods and services, • as the sum of uses in the total economy generation of income account (compensation of employees, taxes less subsidies on production and imports, gross operating surplus and mixed income of the total economy). Personal remittances comprise personal transfers and compensation of employees. Personal transfers consist of all current transfers in cash or in kind made or received b resident households to or from non-resident non-resident individuals. Compensation of employees refers to the income of border, seasonal, and other short-term workers whe are employed in an economy where they are not resident and of residents employed b non-resident entities. Data are the sum of two items defined in the sixth edition of the IMF's Balance of Payments Manual: personal transfers and compensation of employee. The methodology used is in line with the Sixth Edition of the IMF's Balance of Payment and International Investment Position Manual (BPM6). National Bank of Poland Annual data; since 2010	Unit	percent [%] the national economy (resident producer units - domestic) in a given year. The exact definition and methodology for calculating GDP is contained in the regulation (EU) No 549/2013 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 21 May 2013 on the European system of national and regional accounts in the European Union (ESA 2010). GDP value can be calculated in three ways: • from the production side GDP is the sum of value added of all institutional sector or all sections of the Polish Classification of Activities (PKD) of domestic production entities plus taxes less subsidies on products, • from the distribution side GDP is calculated as the sum of domestic demand, i.e. final consumption expenditure and gross capital formation as well as external balance of goods and services, • as the sum of uses in the total economy generation of income account (compensation of employees, taxes less subsidies on production and imports, gross operating surplus and mixed income of the total economy). Personal remittances comprise personal transfers and compensation of employees. Personal transfers consist of all current transfers in cash or in kind made or received b resident households to or from non-resident households. Personal transfers thus inclual current transfers between resident and non-resident individuals. Compensation of employees refers to the income of border, seasonal, and other short-term workers who are employeed in an economy where they are not resident and of residents employed hon-resident entities. Data are the sum of two items defined in the sixth edition of the IMF's Balance of Payments Manual: personal transfers and compensation of employee. The methodology used is in line with the Sixth Edition of the IMF's Balance of Payments Manual: personal transfers and compensation of employee the methodology used is in line with the Sixth Edition of the IMF's Balance of Payments Manual (BPM6).	Available dimensions	total
Data availability Annual data; since 2010	Methodological explanations	 definition and methodology for calculating GDP is contained in the regulation (EU) No 549/2013 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 21 May 2013 on the European system of national and regional accounts in the European Union (ESA 2010). GDP value can be calculated in three ways: from the production side GDP is the sum of value added of all institutional sectors or all sections of the Polish Classification of Activities (PKD) of domestic production entities plus taxes less subsidies on products, from the distribution side GDP is calculated as the sum of domestic demand, i.e. final consumption expenditure and gross capital formation as well as external balance of goods and services, as the sum of uses in the total economy generation of income account (compensation of employees, taxes less subsidies on production and imports, gross operating surplus and mixed income of the total economy). Personal remittances comprise personal transfers and compensation of employees. Personal transfers consist of all current transfers in cash or in kind made or received by resident households to or from non-resident households. Personal transfers thus include all current transfers between resident and non-resident individuals. Compensation of employees refers to the income of border, seasonal, and other short-term workers who are employed in an economy where they are not resident and of residents employed by non-resident entities. Data are the sum of two items defined in the sixth edition of the IMF's Balance of Payments Manual: personal transfers and compensation of employees. The methodology used is in line with the Sixth Edition of the IMF's Balance of Payments
	Data source	National Bank of Poland
Notes	Data availability	Annual data; since 2010
	Notes

Last update: 19-05-2020, 10:45